

FOPER

3rd CALL FOR ABSTRACTS
EXTENDED UNTIL 30 JUNE 2012

Conference

Forests for cities, forests for people
Perspectives on urban forest governance

27-28 September 2012
Zagreb, Croatia

Organisation:

Croatian Forest Research Institute in collaboration with IUFRO section on urban forestry and FOPER II project (EFI)

Background

The growing urban population, pressure from urbanisation and challenges associated with contemporary urban ways of living all call for the creation of healthy and pleasant urban environments. Urban trees, parks and woodlands contribute to a better quality of urban life and environment by providing a wide range of ecosystem services. The way in which these areas are governed and managed affects their sustainability and functionality.

Aim:

This international conference will focus on how urban forests are governed, especially in terms of policy-making and planning. The event will discuss different modes of urban forest governance, identify current policy discourses, and look at the roles of actors and stakeholders. Attention will also be given to benefits provided by urban forests and ways to assess these. Citizens' perceptions and needs, human health and recreation, social and aesthetic aspects of urban forests as well as urban forest health will be also addressed as important elements for decision making related to urban forests. Countries of South East Europe as well as industrialising nations will obtain particular emphasis at the event.

Target audience:

This conference targets scientists, policy-makers and practitioners involved with different aspects of urban forestry. Participants will represent a wide range of fields, including forestry, landscape architecture, architecture, horticulture and arboriculture, urban planning, and the social sciences.

Venue: Hotel International, Zagreb (<http://www.hotel-international.hr/>)
